No. 124.—The Report submitted by the Committee appointed in the Home Department Resolution No. 494, Political, dated the 21st March 1921, on subsequently amended, is annexed and report on the Press and Registration of Books Act, 1910, the Newspaper (Restrictions to Offences) Act, 1920, and the Indian Press Act, 1910, is published below for general information.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE APPOINTED BY THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA TO EXAMINE THE PRESS AND REGISTRATION OF BOOKS ACT, 1910, AND THE INDIAN PRESS ACT, 1910, AND THE NEWSPAPER (RESTRICTIONS TO OFFENCES) ACT, 1920.

In accordance with the instructions contained in the Home Department Resolution No. 534, dated the 21st March 1921, the members of the Committee appointed by the Government of India to examine the Press and Registration of Books Act, 1910, the Indian Press Act, 1910, and the Newspaper (Restrictions to Offences) Act, 1920, have the honor to report for the information of Government and each other as they may think desirable, our conclusions on the questions referred to us for consideration.

2. These conclusions have, we may state, been reached after a careful survey of the political situation, an extensive examination of numerous who appeared before us and a scrutiny of voluminous documentary evidence touching the valuable and weighty opinions of local Governments placed at our disposal. By the Government of India as well as of the memoranda submitted to us by various members of the public. Many of these memoranda were sent in response to a general invitation issued by the Government of India to those interested in the subject under discussion to communicate their views to Government for the Press and we also looked right other prominent persons in your evidence; in our great regret, they were however either unable or, in some cases, unwilling to accept our invitation.

3. Of the Acts referred to as for consideration, the Indian Press Act, 1910, is by far the least important and it will therefore be convenient if in the first place we consider our criticisms in respect of that Act. This is the more desirable because our recommendations in respect of the other two Acts referred to us, must be largely dependent on our findings regarding this measure.

It is unnecessary to discuss in this report, the reasons which induced the Government of India to place the Indian Press Act on the Statute Book. Those who are interested in the subject will find that from fully explained in the reports of the Committee on the Bill in Council. It is apparent however that the main object of the Act was to prevent the dissemination of incendiary or seditious and of defamatory, although the scope of section 4 of the Act is much wider. From 1910, however, circumstances have changed very materially and we have to consider the necessity for the continuance of the law in the light of a political situation entirely different from that in which it was enacted.

4. The chief questions that have to be considered in our opinion are, firstly, whether the Act has been effective in preventing the evil against which it was enacted, secondly whether legislation of this character is now necessary for the maintenance of law and order; and thirdly, whether on a comparison of the advantages and disadvantages which the retention of the Act would involve, its continuance is desirable in the public interest. We may say at the outset that on a careful consideration of these points, we are of opinion that the Act should be repealed.

5. As to the effectiveness of the Act, it is generally admitted that direct incitements to murder and violent crime which are specifically referred to in section 4 (1) (a) of the Act are rarely found in the Press to-day. This was not the case in 1910 so far as a certain section of the Press was concerned, and it is the view of at least one local Government that the Press Act has been tried to the destruction of such public incitements. We are not, however, satisfied that the measure of such incitements is due solely or even mainly to the Act in that it present confirms the ordinary law is not adequate to deal with such offences. Further it must be stated that so far as the law was directed to prevent the more ordinary dissemination of articles, of general misrepresentation of the action of Government, of suggestions of conspiracy or violence, of insinuations of offences and of articles intended to stir up racial feeling, the Act has been of little practical value, for we find that a section of the Press is at present just as hostile to Government as ever it was and that it practices distances calculated to bring the Government and also especially particular classes or sections of the community into hatred and antagonism as freely now as before the Act was passed. Moreover, we believe that the more direct and violent forms of articles are now disseminated more from the platform and through the agency of itinerant propagandists than by the Press, and no press law can be effective for the suppression of such activities. In our opinion, therefore, it must be admitted that the Act has not been wholly effective in securing the object which it was enacted to achieve. We observe that one witness before us went so far as to say that it had both been failed and failing.

6. Turning to the question of the necessity for such legislation, we find that it was a measure enacted at a time when revolutionary propaganda, the object of which was directly promoted by certain organs of the Press, was so active as to endanger the administration. We believe that the revolutionary party is now quiescent, that the associations supporting it have been broken up and that many members of the revolutionary party have realized that the object which they had in view was, under present conditions, to be achieved by constitutional means. For long, the political situation has undergone great changes since 1910 and the necessity for the retention of the Act must be examined in the light of the new constitutional position created by the composition of the new Council of India. It is to be said that the retention of this law is, in these circumstances, not only unnecessary but incompatible with the increasing association of representatives of the people in the administration of the country. We believe also that the widespread influence of seditious organs of the Press will in future be, and is fast already beginning to be, counteracted by the growth of different parties, in addition, each supported by the new press, supplemented by the activities of a properly organized Bureau of Information, the value of which was estimated by many witnesses. It is true the scope of the Act is not limited to the prevention of sedition but it is not necessary for us to discuss in detail the subsidiary provisions included in section 4 of the Act as we believe that these provisions have seldom been used and that the evils against which they are directed can be checked by the ordinary law. We think therefore that under present conditions, the retention of the Act for the purposes for which it was enacted is unnecessary.

7. On our consideration of the third aspect of the case, viz., the comparative advantages and disadvantages of retaining the Act, we find that, while many Local Governments advance in favour of its retention on the administration, on the other hand the Act is regarded with little favour by nearly all classes of Indian opinion. Most of the statements received before us before it is to be included in principle and spirit in its application. It has been said that the same of avoidance of the Act are so comprehensive that legitimate criticism of Government might well be brought within its scope; that the Act is very anomalous in its operation; that it has been applied with varying degrees of severity at different times and by different Local Governments and in particular that it has not been applied with equal severity to English-owned and Indian-owned papers. A general feeling was also expressed among the witnesses that the Act is involving and hampering to Indian journalism and that the restrictions imposed by the measure in the more latter branches of the press services incident to Government by the Press in the way. Many witnesses indeed are of opinion that the Act is a hindrance to the growth of a healthy spirit of responsibility in the Press and that it does possess of itself an independent character from putting the profession of journalism. Finally it is mentioned that the Act places in the hands of the executive government arbitrary powers, and subject to adequate control by any independent tribunal, which may be used to suppress legitimate criticism of Government and that such a law is entirely inconsistent with the spirit of the scheme of the gradual evolution of responsible Government.

8. There is in our judgment great loss in many of these criticisms. We feel, we already state, that the Act has not proved effective in preventing the dissemination of seditious articles and it is doubtful whether it is necessary to retain it for the purpose of preventing its use in the more direct and violent crimes. Further in view of the great views we have made as to the principle of the operation of the Act, we have come to the conclusion that it would be in the interests of the administration that it should be repealed. In making this recommendation, we have not overlooked the opinion
